

No matter the multiplication of media outlets, the initial ideal of the framing fathers of the constitution still calls for multiple and disparate voices in the marketplace. More and more ownership in fewer and fewer different hands is diametrically opposed to that democratic principle of arguing and arriving at consensus.